CARING FOR CARERS LAUNCH

On 10th November the Leopold Community & Learning Centre launched the Caring for Carers Program. This program was made possible by receiving a grant from the State Government and enables us to offer Carers in our community free workshops, access to support services and community lunches.

Paul Koury, publisher of the Australian Carers Guide (pictured above left) was the guest speaker at Wednesday's event and described how he saw a great need for resources and information for those who were carers of relatives or friends. LCLC Caring for Carers program aims to also help and equip Carers within our community.

The launch also recognised the Centre's status as an official 'Carer Friendly' Neighbourhood House. Chairperson Alan Davis (pictured above right) placed the official decal on our door as an acknowledgement of this achievement.

Carers play a vital role in our community and we applaud all that they do so if you are a Carer of a loved one and are looking for connections and support, or you know of someone who is, we would love to hear from you.

Magpie Larks

Week 9

Home is where the heart is

All I can say is it is good to be back home and no sign of White Van Man! I give the Missus a peck and take flight to survey the street before checking out what delicious delights Mrs Greyhead has left out for us.... I may have a splash in the bath while I am there. Everything is looking good as I swoop past a band of pigeons scattering them in a flutter of feather before landing next to Swipes on the fence.

"Gidday mate," he says while he munches on his breakfast. "The old girl has outdone herself today, juice strawberries and nectarines", proven by the pink dribble running down the front of his chest. "You know Swipes I think pink suits you," laughs Baldy as he settles on the other side of Swipes on the fence who gives him a fierce stare then pretends to ignore him.

Hops is hopping about and singing in the bird bath making a splash, I decide to join him, both in the bath and with a trill. We are all feeling joyous to be back home in our street and as if to confirm our happiness, Mrs Greyhead pops out of the back door with more magpie treats and she is chirping away happily too. She is obviously celebrating our victory with us as neither White Van Man nor the Hulk have been spotted round here all week.

After wallowing in the bath for a while I perch on the edge of the bath, shake myself dry and then check out Mrs Greyheads new offerings. Mmmm, fresh apricots, my favourite! What a nice old girl she is! While I am enjoying my second helping of apricots I hear the familiar caw of Horace as he lands on the lawn nearby. "Howdy Bomber, just came to give you the latest on the White Van Man." We all go silent and the feathers on my back quiver with anxiety.

"It looks like the guy has been sent out to catch cats now...and you will never guess who he got in his trap!" Horace is chuckling to himself as we give him a steely stare as he takes his time sharing the news. "Poor guy cannot get a break, I see him pick up the trap as a black paw comes out the side and seriously scratches his arm, he starts screaming and howling and so does the cat...it's the Black Hulk! White Van Man still manages to load him into the van, and they drive off into the sunset!"

Horace is now rolling around on the grass laughing, I just feel relief and a small sense of triumph that we no longer have to deal with those two adversaries. I say farewell to my friends and fly back home to the missus to give her the good news. Hopefully we can all live peacefully ever after...Although the odd bit of excitement would not go astray.

THE END

This is the final instalment of 'Magpie Larks' written by our Manager, Kerrie Tomkins who has written all the short stories produced by Leopold BUZZ since its inception.

Kerrie has been the Manager of Leopold Community and Learning Centre for the past five years and has contributed to the Centre in so many ways, too numerous to mention, in fact it would take a whole Leopold Buzz edition to list!!

Kerrie is undertaking a new adventure and moving to Queensland at the end of the month.

We will miss her and wish her all the very best in this new Chapter of her life.

Leopold Garden Club

I have just spent the morning feeding and watering all the plants I grow in pots. This includes many flowering plants: bearded irises, liliums, gladioli and ranunculi; which are just some of those that I grow in pots that are flowering or about to flower. I also grow many vegetables in pots and foam boxes. This became my main method of gardening plants as a result of the water restrictions brought about by the drought we had some years ago. The main reason is still valid now as it was years ago water. I also found that it also brought several other advantages over time.

The obvious advantage is in water saving you only water the plant you want to water with the required amount. A collection tray or pot at the base can act as a collection point and reduce water loss. The other advantages are that as I have got older weeds annoy me more and get harder to reach when at ground level. In the pot they tend to be less of them and they are easier to get at. Weeding becomes manageable. In fact most parts of planting and maintenance become more manageable.

I can say our October meeting which was held outside with BYO chairs and in 2 groups because of number restrictions worked very well. So well; that it may become a way of enjoying the spring and early autumn weather. There was also interest expressed in increasing the number of times the Garden Club meet. This will be seriously discussed at our November meeting with the idea to formulating the club program next year.

Now for some practical information. I often see horse manure selling on the roadside. I use the horse manure to make a fertilizer tea for my plants. You often find that the manures you buy particularly horse is very fresh and full of weed seeds. The usual way around this is to make a pile and mature it and destroy the weeds by allowing it to rot down then dig it or work it through you garden beds. The fertilizer tea saves this process from needing to be done. Most home gardeners lack the space for such a pile. So make the fertilizer tea: just mix a quantity of manure in a bucket with water. Do this by putting the manure in a fabric bag (pantyhose does the trick) and sitting in the bucket of water. The length of time I leave it to soak is 1 – 2 weeks. I then put 1 litre of this liquid into a watering can and fill it with water (if too strong it can burn you plants). I then water my plants using this golden tea once a fortnight. Normal watering as needed by the plants in between feedings. The scaling up of the process of making your manure tea is dependent on the size of container you have available. The dilution is always around 1:10 when using no matter the size of your brewing container. If this has wetted your appetite for gardening then join our Leopold Community Centre Garden Club at its November meeting (3rd Monday at 1 pm).

We will still have restrictions on numbers so Phone 52501301 and speak to Sherrill to organise your spot.
